TITLE The Business and Academic Cases for Process Safety

ABSTRACT

This talk will provide an historical perspective on process safety from 1700 to today. Industry quickly learned, long before any government regulations, that "the traits required to achieve excellence in safety are the same as those required to achieve outstanding results in all other aspects of our business." The academic community is currently undergoing a similar journey of incorporating process safety into the curriculum. How this happened and what this means for students going on to industry, academia or government will be discussed.

BIOGRAPHY

Daniel A. Crowl is currently an Adjunct Professor at the University of Utah. He retired from Michigan Technological University in August of 2015. He is a Professor Emeritus and past Herbert H. Dow Professor for Chemical Process Safety at Michigan Tech. He has been involved with process safety education and research since 1985. He is the author or editor of several books on process safety, has produced many SACHE modules and student certificate programs, and is past editor of the AICHE journal Process Safety Progress. He is a member of the AICHE SACHE Committee and the 11a Committee on Loss Prevention. He is a fellow of AICHE, the Center for Chemical Process Safety (CCPS), and the ACS Division of Chemical Health and Safety. He has received numerous awards, including most recently the Merit Award from the Mary K. O'Connor Process Safety Center at Texas A&M. He is a Certified Process Safety Professional (CPSP). He holds a BS in Fuel Science from the Pennsylvania State University and an MS and PhD in Chemical Engineering from the University of Illinois. He and his wife now reside in the Salt Lake City area.
